

We are making a booking for next year already. Wonderful atmosphere, quality competition, excellent business talks, and prospective interest of foreign partners. We have an amazing product and are counting on the jury's sophisticated taste during the next edition.

Manufaktura

---

Interesting talks and favourable business climate. We have a unique premium product; our offer addresses discerning consumer and partners, which is exactly what we found during the WFW Fair... we will definitely meet again next year.

Dakyle

---

The apple brought Poles together in the wake of the embargo; we producers were proud of the consumers' reaction. We wish for our search for new sales markets to unite all producers, and for exhibition stands in Poland and worldwide to follow the motto "Polish apples – for everyone, anytime" – such will be the leitmotiv for our get-together at the next Fair edition. The entire industry in the capital!

Unia Owocowa, Waldemar Żóćcik

---

I have been attending the Fair ever since its 2nd edition, closely watching its development and potential. Polish confectionery is an unsung leader – and a difficult export product. We are on a constant search for new and exotic markets, engaging in promotion campaigns during any interesting exhibition and fair events which are an opportunity to showcase the flavour of chocolate and confectionery products and secure an interest in our offer. WorldFood is definitely such an opportunity.

Słowianka, Sławomir Pawłowski

---

We are a visitor this year, and are planning to return as an Exhibitor during the next edition. Why? Because this Fair is an opportunity for domestic and foreign contracts for quality products at reasonable prices, all available at a single location for three days. It is an excellent opportunity for business talks and meetings to discuss specifics. The location – the capital's city centre – is an asset as well.

Wojtkowe Przedsiębiorstwo Handlowe, Piotr Koziarski

---

Our offer targets individuals engaging in an active lifestyle, interested in health and style with no flavour limitations or other sugar-related properties. The capital city is most definitely a place where people will make stevia part of their diet, enjoying its sweet taste with no impact on health. The Warsaw WorldFood Fair has been a wonderful venue for meetings with our customers ever since its first edition. See you next year is all I can say!!

Stewiarnia, Beata Straszewska

---

A Fair event in central Poland is an excellent opportunity to showcase the Polish manufacturers' offer to the English, and British products to Polish importers and business people. It is also an excellent location for meetings and talks, not only business-related. Our countries have become partners not merely through trade, but through cultural and lifestyle exchanges as well. This may be an idea for the next edition – to highlight the influence of the Polish community abroad on British life, and display the British lifestyle in Poland. This could be an attractive addition to the Fair... we will most certainly be back.

Polish-British Chamber of Commerce, Marek Szejbal

---

This is our first time at a food rather than wine fair, and we are pleasantly surprised with the overall level of business conversation, and the visitors' knowledge of wine and winemaking. We would obviously be interested in reaching a broader audience with our Polish wine, which is excellent if slightly underappreciated; we hope that organisers consider a Polish wine day during the next edition. Great event climate, good business talks.

Roman Myśliwiec, owner of the Golez vineyard, founder of the Galicia Vitis Foundation for the Development and Promotion of Winemaking

---

We have extensive experience in attending fair and exhibition events in Poland and abroad. Regrettably, few exhibitions in Poland have the capacity to meet our requirements, particularly in business-related matters. WorldFood is a pleasant surprise in terms of organisation, business people's attention, talks focusing on contracts and trade, etc. Promotion is hugely important and there is no buying or selling without it – yet it is serious talks and their results that warrant corporate stability and options to invest in soft activities, Fair promotion included... which is the objective of any business endeavour.

Beata Żóćcik, Activ – manufacturer of Royal Apple juices